Chaplains' Corner – What does your ID look like?

I used to think I was pretty good at it. Not any more though. My confidence has crashed. My foolproof system is foolproof no longer. A dark force has taken up residence in my computer. My passwords have brought me undone. A proper pain. And I had all of them carefully stored. Always worked when I needed them. But something diabolical happened. Not sure what. But have had to rework many of them. All safely stored again, until the next meltdown that is.

How about this? It got worse. Having established my ID with the right password, one site was still not satisfied. I still had to verify my ID with a special code! Really? You've got to be kidding? And to rub insult into injury as the old saying goes, another site rejected my answers to the security questions. It no longer believed where my dad was born. And it refused the name of my pet cat when I was a kid. Yes, it's all about keeping our ID safe. I accept that. But it got me thinking too....

- What really is our ID? – Hear this. There's only one of us in this big, wide, wonderful world. Which means that each one of us is very special. Any mum or dad knows this. Ever come across two children exactly the same in a family? No chance. Even identical twins have their preferences.
- Our DNA confirms this – I'm no scientist. But the fact is we all have our own DNA code. Not shared with anyone else. A breathtaking reality. DNA tests have linked soldiers fallen in World War One with their relatives alive today. So, there are family likenesses. Quite remarkable.
- Others may try to tell us our ID – Like, you're clever, funny and good to be around. Or, you're weird, boring and we don't need your company. So, watch out for the put down crowd. And listen to your encouragers. But we have to do more than rely on others to set our ID.
- So, why is it hard for us to set our own ID? – There's an easy explanation. When we compare ourselves with others, we create a list of what they can do and what we can't. We always come off second best. We are our own worst critics. We put ourselves down as incompetent has beens.
- And our ID suffers in other ways – In addition to what we can't do, we keep track of our past failures, mistakes and bad calls. Mums and dads especially can fall for this one. We let our past define us. Bad call. The past is over and done with. Hopefully though it has given us some wisdom.
- Where to with our ID then? – Here are some ways to get our ID sorted. What's one thing we enjoy doing? And we're good at? Write it down. What's a blessing we give to others? Our listening ear? Our company? Our time? Our energy? Our continuing support? Note these down too.
- What about our ID as mums and dads? – Again, we run the risk of comparing our parenting with what other parents are on about. Forget it. Some basic checks: is our place mostly cheerful? Do we enjoy each other's company? Do we listen to each other? Are we into hugs? Do we say "I love you."
- What about our family ID then? – Do we have sleepovers? Do our children's friends like dropping by? Do other mums and dads show up for a cuppa? Do they call for our support when they run into trouble? A warm, sharing family ID is a wonderful community builder. We need these families.

When it comes to our real ID, it's not just keeping track of our passwords. It's about who we are as real people, unique without anyone else being the same as us. Let's be thankful for who we are, for what we bring to our families. Let's be thankful for the gifts, skills and love that bless us and those around us.
